Farmers invited to share their story on new 'Farm Fresh Food' blog

Sharing the story of agriculture has never been more important, but sometimes it can be difficult for farmers to determine just how to get the word out. Thanks to a new project from the Michigan Ag Council, farmers have the opportunity to share their own stories, in their own words.

The 'Farm Fresh Food' blog launched March 1 on MLive.com and features farmer-written blog posts about everyday farm happenings, as well as favorite down-home recipes and interesting facts about Michigan agriculture.

"This blog is a great opportunity for people all over Michigan to learn about where their food comes from, from farmers," said Gail Frahm, Michigan Soybean Promotion Committee's representative on the MAC. "Not everyone has the chance to live on a farm, or even visit a farm, so 'Farm Fresh Food' will bring the farm to them."

Farmers interested in contributing to the blog are encouraged to contact Alex Henry at alex@miagcouncil.org. No blog-writing experience or technical skills are necessary and time commitments are flexible. Writers from all agricultural backgrounds are encouraged to participate.

Readers can find 'Farm Fresh Food' at <http://blog.mlive.com/freshfood>. Recipe cards that promote the blog are also available. Contact Henry for more information.
